July Highlights

National Flood Insurance Program Fleshed Out
 Among the more dramatic effects of climate change are the increasing frequency and severity of flood events, and much attention has been brought to the plight of those who have struggled to repair their homes because they lacked adequate flood insurance to do so. This, it turns out, is not a faraway problem. Arlington, Belmont, and Cambridge share a flood plain in the Alewife area, and for that reason a Stormwater Flooding Group from all three towns has been meeting regularly to make plans and provide information for the likely eventuality of our own flood event. The latest in this series features a presentation about the National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP) given by Joy Duperault, the director of the DCR Flood Hazard Management Program. She covers everything from the basics of the program through the resources available to all local officials and residents, and anyone who might be affected by such an event will want to tune in. It's on our Government channel.

What Does Food Entrepreneurship Look Like?
 Just up the road in Brattleboro, VT, an interesting summit was convened at the end of May. The theme of this particular Slow Living Summit was "The Future of Farm and Food Entrepreneurship." Hundreds gathered to hear a host of speakers – including authors, professors, and farmers – who focused on how to grow conscious food and agriculture businesses. The goal is to give current and aspiring entrepreneurs the tools, resources, and mentorship needed to evolve those businesses, thereby creating positive change in their communities and revolutionizing the future of food. Grand ambitions to be sure, but they provide a roadmap for getting there. See for yourself on the Public channel.

"Your Federal Government" Explained
 Our friends at Waltham Community Access Corp have produced a valuable primer on the role of different agencies in our federal government, and they have graciously shared it with us. "Your Federal Government" is a series of 32 half-hour programs, each one devoted to examining one specific government department, from the FDA to FEMA to the Postal Service. Featuring interviews with agency officials, each episode uncovers both the origins and operations of these important bodies that are constantly referred to but seldom explained. You will find this eye-opening program on the Government channel.
